Gatorade Case

By : Ketan Khanna

Gatorade Brief

What is the opportunity that advertising can address?

- Your words go here: The primary opportunity that advertising can address is to convince the target market (athletes/Sporty Moms) that Gatorade is the primary option when it comes to purchasing sport beverages that provide optimal rehydration and thirst quenching for athletes. This is imperative for the company to be above its competitors in terms of sales and product perception. The target audience has to believe that Gatorade is the superior brand that caters to a customer's needs when it comes to rehydration, thirst quenching and contributing to optimal physical performance. Potentially also the reasons for their sacrifice (discussed later, but we can see a financial incentive for their hard work.

What are the objectives?

- Your words go here:

- Create an advertisement that can convince the brand's primary target market (Sporty mom's) that Gatorade is the optimal choice for thirst quenching beverages
- The advertisement should incorporate an emotional vibe that resonates with these mom's and all the contributions they make into making sure their kids perform their best when conducting physical activity. (ie. The best athlete's they can possibly be).
- Show that Gatorade supports these moms and the efforts they put forward to making sure their kids perform at an optimal level.
- Show that these mom's belong to a community of individuals supported by Gatorade. They are not alone and that Gatorade understands the effort the put forward when striving to provide the best for their kids when it comes to their sport's life. Gatorade supports these mom's and ensures them that they belong to this community.

Gatorade Brief (cont'd)

Who is the target audience and what should we know about them?

- Hard working moms that are extremely involved with their kid's sports lives.
- In many ways they manage 100% of the process of when it comes to their kid's sports lives. They are responsible for dropping these kids off to practice, supporting/cheering them during games, carrying their equipment, keeping them satiated with food and drink, etc.
- They even put effort into learning more about the sport that their kid is involved with in order to offer advice and support on how their child can improve their performance during competition.
- They are a community of sport moms. When it comes to their kid's sports, many of these mom's are willing to help each other as they understand how difficult it can be to have the lifestyle of a sports mom (always on the go).
- Though initially getting their kids involved with sports is due to healthy development, learning good teamwork and having fun, many of these moms are hoping their kids can play their sport professionaly one day.

What is the consumer insight?

- That these moms sacrifice an incredible amount of their own lives to ensure their kids succeed not only on the field but as well as off it. Many of these moms are not only taking their kids to sports because it would be healthy for their development, but also because it could potentially mean that the child's future is secured (through the potential scholarships they can earn by playing sports). They will do almost anything to achieve this goal for their child, as proven by Maria, who give up her day job (money $) so that her daughter could be dedicated at playing sports. As a result (presumably through scholarships) her daughter went on to be a lawyer (success stories).

SPORTS
Team Size Car!
To the Rescue!
What game?
BIGGEST FAN!
Coaches, too!
MOM
AN EAR
TIME
LAP
GIVES HER ALL
TAXI Service
Preserves the Memories...

Gatorade Brief (cont'd)

What do they believe and do currently?

- That putting in that sacrifice will truly benefit their child long term, similar to the kid that became a lawyer (presumably through scholarships). She was only able to achieve this goal because her mom quit her day job in order to support her sports/athletics.
- Currently they do anything in their power to support their kids in achieving their peak athletic performance. The image in the previous slide incapsulates this well (buy healthy snacks, drive their kids to practice/games, offers advice, healer, and preserves the memories
- Some of them might not feel appreciated for all the hard work they put forward

What do we want them to believe and do as a result of the advertising?

- Gatorade wants them to believe that the hard work and sacrifices that Moms put forward to their kids development (athletic and academic) is appreciated by the company and Gatorade supports these moms in these positive endeavors. This can be achieved through advertising by connecting with the primary audience (sport moms) through emotional resonance. Personally I believe this can be accomplished through an advertisement with modest budget that is distributed through various media channels (tv, radio, etc) that physically shows these moms actually putting forward this effort. Show these moms day to day life of managing their kids sports lives and let them know Gatorade understands their struggles and that Gatorade is the primary and optimal choice for moms always busy on the go as result of being Sport Moms. I think this type of emotional resonance, in which the moms feel appreciated will go a long way into boosting sales, showing effort made both by the kid and the mom.

Gatorade Brief (cont'd)

What one thing can we convey about the brand that will achieve this?

- As a thirst quenching sports beverage, Gatorade can help athletes (especially kids) achieve their peak physical performance during sporting events and practices. This can translate into a story in which the help Gatorade provides to an athletes athletic performance is translated into future success (playing professionally, getting scholarships, etc), making it all those sacrifices worth it for mom.

Why should they believe it?

- The company's legacy [helping moms since 1965 (company's inception)]
- Gatorade is by far the number one sports drink in North America, and they have always focused their marketing communication on athletes. Gatorade is basically 'performance fuel in a bottle'.
- It has carbs and electrolytes that are scientifically proven to rehydrate athletes so that they can go longer, you know, 'it does what water can't'

Gatorade Brief (cont'd)

Executional considerations & Mandatories?

- Budget: Don't want to make the campaign too expensive. Therefore best to focus on the day to day activities of a sports mom. This should not cost too much like hiring a professional athlete to endorse the product. Though this can be included if relevant (athletes mom?)
- Not to come off too strong: Do not turn the mom off from the brand. Have a sympathetic and understanding voice rather than an imposing one. The personal nature of this topic is a sensitive and should not be presented as a joke.
- Mandatory to make the ad emotional and connect with the audience (sporty moms) to make it impactful and resonating. Connect with the heartstring of the audience. "We know how hard you work to make sure your kid gets the best when playing sports. That's why Gatorade is the #1 choice for moms when it comes to sports beverages, etc. etc."
- Present real world moms and not actors. This can go a long way in appearing legitimate to the consumer
- Consideration: Some type of real world initiative to further validate Gatorade as a public friendly company (contest, event for moms, online blog, scholarship fund, etc.)
- Show development. Show the hard work moms put forward but then show them how they reap the rewards and how Gatorade supports these endeavors.

