Gatorade Case: Media Channel Execution

Media Channel Execution: Rough idea

- Media Channel execution should focus on truly emphasizing how Sport moms contribute towards the overall success and participation of their kids in sports activities, while showing how Gatorade supports these endeavors. An advertisement similar to the one shown on the top left of the slide encapsulates this quite perfectly. The goal is to show how mom's support has gone a long way into the development of their child into a full fledged athlete.

- Note: The 3 media channels I am using to articulate this message is television, web video and Posters/Billboards. These 3 media channels will work in harmony of one another to provide the most effective marketing campaign possible.

TV Execution 1: Mom helps out

- Show a TV ad which focuses on a Sport mom and her child
- Show the mom involved in a hand full of activities she does related to her child's athletic development
- Examples are similar to the ad shows in this slide
- I've felt every hit you endured: Show the son being hit in football with the mother narrating the ad
- Memorized your playbook: Show the mom reading over an actual Football playbook, again narrating. Can do the same with stinky equipment, etc.
- With the last line, in which it says I will do whatever it takes to help you, show the son getting a touchdown to win the game and the mother cheering. End off with the Gatorade symbol, how it improves athletic performance of the athlete and the Become Tagline

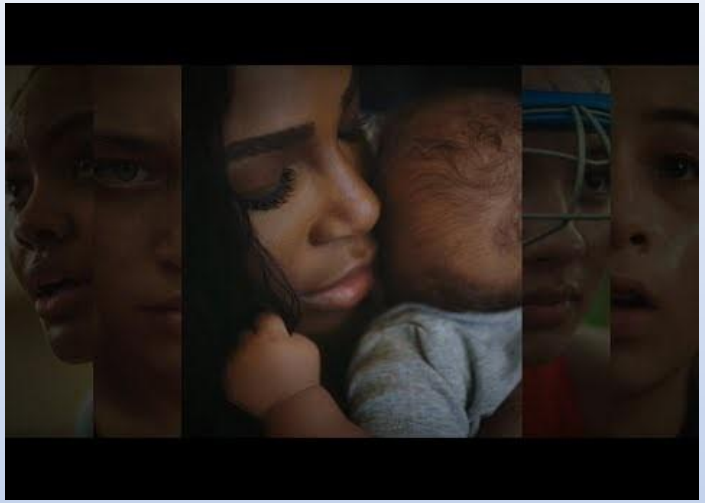

TV Execution 2

- This ad can be more light hearted versus the previous one. This ad would revolve around a mom managing every aspect of the child's workout routine. I am thinking a baseball pitch would be most ideal
- On the field during practice, she tells her son to "do 50 pushups, do 10 laps, work out on that arm, learn how to catch, etc"
- Everyone on the kid's team looks on in bewilderment. They ask the kid "do you really let your mom coach you with baseball" in a mocking gesture. Product placement for Gatorade seen throughout the ad
- Son replies saying something along the lines of "she knows what she's doing". Drinks from a Gatorade bottle, goes up to bat and hits a home run.
- Mom is smirking from the bleachers. The tagline "Become" shows up with the Gatorade symbol. Fin.
- For both these ads it would be useful to play the ad on television programs Sports Moms are most likely to watch.

Web Video Ad/Banner

- The video ad will be shown on desktop and app in the sense of interstitial video.
- The interstitial video will be an awareness ad about moms and their contributions towards their kid's athletic development.
- Similar to the tv video ad (number 1). Show everything the mom does in order to help her child's development.
- The beauty about the video interstitial is that we can buy from 3rd party ad exchanges a segment list. We can combine "Mobile Moms" with "Sports Enthusiast" segment to target moms for which this ad would most resonate
- The rest can also be combined with age and language targeting. (Age: 25-55 to, Female, EN targeting vs FR (Quebec). The language will be based on location based targeting.
- The apps and desktop ads should be played on publisher websites and apps Sport Moms are most likely to visit
- One thing necessary with both a video and display banner would be to have an appropriate landing page associated with it. This could direct to the main Gatorade website, but more effective advertising would be one actually having a landing page highlighting the contributions of moms through the Gatorade brand.

Social Media Video

- The same interstitial video should definitely be shown on Gatorade's social media pages. All those following Gatorade or just users on social media in general can gain awareness on how Gatorade is dedicated towards helping Moms with developing their kids into the best possible athletes they can be.

Pros:

- Platforms with numerous users (FB, Instagram, Twitter, etc.)
- Can also use customer segmenting
- Help develop brand
- Create awareness and goodwill amongst viewers

Outdoor poster

- With outdoor posters, you want to catch the audience's attention very quickly, as it is likely they will only glance at your advertisement for a split second. For this reason, the "less is more approach" is valid.
- Target busy areas which are high traffic and have a lot of people passing by on a daily basis
- It is difficult in this scenario to promote Sport Moms and Gatorade in the same advertisement. However, if we took something along the lines of the BECOME Advertisement, removed the small text, made the Gatorade bottle bigger and had a tagline such as "playing for mom, "nurturing/developing for success" something along those lines, the advertisement could be very effective in articulating the intended message. Highlight Gatorade's effects on athletic performance (already shown in BECOME ads)
- The example to the right is a good example of how this could work. There is less going on than the previous example, and fusing the Gatorade symbol with the billboard could be very effective advertising.

- Similar to having a poster outdoors, having one on transit stops (bus, subway, train, etc.) would also be very effective. Can be the same as the billboard poster from the previous slide.

Transit Poster

Conclusion

- Regardless of what media channel is used to advertise the Gatorade brand towards sport moms, the message that is being articulated is the same. Gatorade is the optimal choice for Moms looking to enhance their child's athletic development. Though each media channel differs slightly in strategic execution, they must work in harmony and contain the same message (eg. BECOME). This will resonate with the audience and the next time sports, moms or the word BECOME is on their mind, they will remember Gatorade. An important note that may have been excluded previously is to always highlight in each ad the positive effect Gatorade has on athletic performance ("more effective than water"). This long term strategy has the intent to increase sales, create positive brand awareness and capture new/existing market segments.
